

DOD INTERGOVERNMENTAL SUPPORT AGREEMENT (IGSA)

In 2013, Congress enacted new legislation creating the Intergovernmental Support Agreements (IGSA), 10 USC 2679. This new authority allowed the military services to formal partnerships with local and state governments to for the provision, receipt, or sharing of installation and community support services.

To date, 170 IGSA agreements have been established at nearly 100 installations across the country. These agreements have been used for a wide array of services, including waste removal, training range maintenance and joint use, public transportation, stray animal control, water treatment and testing, road maintenance, facility and utilities maintenance and training, custodial services, computer-aided dispatch, joint military-community police and fire response and training, and snow removal.

A 2018 GAO study of eight IGSA's found that the services will generate at least $9 million in benefits, including cost savings and avoidances annually from just those eight agreements alone. The same study concluded that IGSA's have provided significant nonfinancial benefits such as enhanced mission effectiveness and readiness, reduced administrative time, and improved relationships with local communities.

defensecommunities.org